Press Reaction to Modulus: Overwhelming Praise

Following its debut at the CEDIA 2016 home theater conference, both tech press and mainstream media were unabashed in lauding Modulus as “revolutionary,” “long-awaited” and “a steal for the price.” They predicted strong market demand for Modulus, praising the M1’s “terrific value.”

“How many devices do you have in your entertainment system, really? If you’re like us, you have stacks of A/V hardware taking up space. What Modulus does is collapse all of those smart home packages into one coherent, intuitive system. It’s so obvious, we can’t believe nobody’s done it before. Mark our words, this one’s a legacy-maker.”

“The stylish, brilliant Modulus media hub is a truly original product, and consumers will be cheering the minute this hits the shelves. All your content in one place, with one interface and one dazzling remote. It has so many features it’s a steal for the projected $3,000 price tag.”

“One of the top six highlights from CEDIA 2016. Modulus Media Hub promises a lot, including DVD and Blu-ray archiving, a wealth of streaming service support, 4K support, remote media access, and a DVR capability that applies to everything (including streaming).”

“It’s a “revolutionary media hub” that’s almost too good to be true. Imagine putting a Kaleidescape server with a Roku 4, and then wrapping the combo in a TiVo DVR — and that description still doesn’t come close to describing the Modulus M1. The current iteration of the menu screens is beautiful and engaging, not to mention extremely intuitive.”

Austin American-Statesman

“Lots of boxes. All necessary to perform different functions because nobody’s really solved the problem of combining all of these disparate types of devices into one unit. An Austin company with a new product it debuted at the CEDIA 2016 trade show in Dallas over the weekend, says it might have the box A/V geeks have been waiting for.”

“An all-in-one answer to everything home theater needs. There is nothing like it on the market, a completely original product.”
